

THE CANADIAN INSTITUTE FOR INFORMATION AND PRIVACY STUDIES

Who Are We?

Our members and advisors include many of Canada's acknowledged leaders and thinkers in the information rights field—including researchers, educators, journalists, lawyers, communicators, IT entrepreneurs and professionals, activists, union and nonprofit staff, practitioners in government and the private sector, and former provincial information and privacy Commissioners.

Collectively, we are committed to a vigorous democratic Canada built on ready access to government information and decision-making, and a free flow of information in society without undue restrictions; the right of citizens to a private life and freedom from inappropriate scrutiny and intrusion; open government and open data; secure preservation of key public records through archives and libraries; freedom of speech and expression; and a free press and media democracy.

Our leadership team includes people with professional backgrounds in nonprofit management, communications, accounting, law, research, education—and, of course, information and privacy issues.
